Mark and Anthony are talking about buying a house.

Mark: Hey, did I tell you that I bought a house in the suburbs of Tokyo?

Anthony: No, you didn't. Congratulations! But I've heard it's pretty expensive to buy one in Japan.

Mark: Yeah, it can be. Actually, my monthly payments are more affordable than they were when I was renting my old apartment. My children are growing up too and need more space, so buying a larger place made sense for us as a family.

Anthony: I see. Is the ^{*1}real estate market in Japan a lot different from other countries?

Mark: Well, unlike most other countries, the value of a house here tends to decrease in value after it's bought, and as for the land itself, the value has been going down constantly since the 1990s. Houses are also not built to last here like in other countries, so they are often rebuilt during the owner's lifetime.

Anthony: That doesn't sound too promising at all. Why did you still decide to buy one?

Mark: To be honest, I had some bad experiences with renting here. Some landlords don't want to rent to foreign residents and there were so many fees to pay that made it expensive. In the end, owning a house has made us feel more settled and less likely to leave.

Anthony: That makes sense. So, you must still like living in Japan, I guess.

Mark: Generally, I do. Tokyo is, for the most part, a safe and clean city and there is less street crime here compared to other cities like London or New York, I think. Our kids can take public transportation across the city on their own and we don't have to worry at all.

Anthony: That's so true. But still, you must have some problems with the language barrier.

Mark: It used to be a challenge, especially when I first got here. For a while, I could get by with basic Japanese, but I made a real effort to learn the language and understand the culture. Plus, I've always found that Japanese people will often go out of their way to help foreigners in need.

Anthony: Well, it sounds like you really thought a lot about your decision. I imagine that many non-Japanese staying here long-term might consider the same issues.

問 1 (1 1)

Where do Mark and his family live now?

- ① In a rental apartment
- ② Just outside of Tokyo
- ③ Near public transportation
- ④ In the center of Tokyo

問 2 (1 2)

Mark believes that...

- ① the price of land is going to rise in the future.
- ② the price of a house in Japan is too expensive.
- ③ paying rent every month is cheaper than buying a house.
- ④ buying a house will help his family live more comfortably.

問 3 (1 3)

The word “decrease” in line 8 is closest in meaning to...

- ① lift up.
- ② stay stable.
- ③ go down.
- ④ become longer.

問 4 (1 4)

Which best describes Mark’s rental experience in Japan?

- ① Very smooth
- ② Generally positive
- ③ Mostly negative
- ④ Extremely confusing

問 5 (1 5)

According to the conversation, which of the following is true?

- ① Japanese houses are built to last longer than ones abroad.
- ② There are more risks to living in Tokyo than other big cities.
- ③ Having a hard time when arriving in Japan is enjoyable.
- ④ Studying hard can make life easier for foreigners in Japan.

RE: Inquiry and Request for More Information

Dear Planet First,

I recently came across your flyer at my local community center and was truly inspired by your organization's commitment to environmental conservation. As someone who cares about our planet, I would like to learn more about your initiatives and how I can contribute.

I am interested in volunteering for activities mentioned in the flyer. Could you please provide me with details about upcoming volunteer opportunities with dates, times, and locations?

Moreover, I would like to attend your educational workshops to gain insights into sustainable practices. Could you kindly share the workshop schedule, topics covered, and any registration procedures?

I would also like to inquire about opportunities for promotion and outreach. How can I get involved in raising awareness about environmental challenges? Are there any ongoing campaigns or events I could get involved in?

I look forward to receiving more details about your programs and guidance on how I can participate actively.

Please feel free to contact me.

Warm regards,

Marcus Williams
