May Day

May the 1st in the British city of Oxford is a special day for the local people, students at its famous university, as well as the many foreign visitors that come each year. May Day, as it is known, starts early in the morning when people gather in the center of the city before sunrise. They then walk to a famous bridge where they stand under a tall tower, listening to a chorus sing. Once that has finished, there are a variety of events to celebrate the day, including Morris dancing, a local traditional dance, English folk music, as well as performances of modern music and dance groups. The Celts originated the event in<sup>*1</sup>the Dark Ages to mark the beginning of summer. With more sunlight and longer days, people hoped for good harvests. People used to decorate their houses with green plants because green is associated with life and rebirth. Today, you will see many people dressed in green on the day. May Day may be an old tradition, but it continues to gain in popularity.

Read the conversation between Moe, a tourist visiting the UK from Japan, and Frank from England.

Frank: Moe, have you heard about King Charles III's upcoming coronation? It's on May 6, this year, and it marks a new era for the United Kingdom.

Moe: Yes, I have! It sounds like a big event. Will the ceremony be held at Buckingham Palace?

Frank: No, it'll be at Westminster Abbey. But the <sup>*1</sup>procession starts at Buckingham Palace, passing through Trafalgar Square, then on to Big Ben, before reaching Westminster Abbey. During the ceremony, King Charles III will officially become the King and receive the Crown Jewels. His wife will also be crowned alongside him.

Moe: The Crown Jewels must be very important. Are they necessary for the ceremony?

Frank: Absolutely! The Crown Jewels have been used for centuries and represent the British monarchy. St. Edward's Crown, crafted of gold and precious stones, will be placed on the new King's head.

Moe: After the ceremony, will there be any special events?

Frank: Definitely! There'll be a reception at Buckingham Palace, attended by members of the royal family, as well as leaders and important individuals from around the world, including Japan.

Moe: It sounds like a great event. But I wonder if having a royal family and these traditions is outdated. What do you think?

Frank: It's an interesting debate. On the one hand, the royal family preserves our rich history and culture. They help with tourism, generate income for the country, and promote national identity. Additionally, their charity work and <sup>*2</sup>diplomatic roles bring stability to the United Kingdom.

Moe: I understand the benefits, but are there any negatives?

Frank: Certainly. Some people say it's costly for taxpayers. There are also debates about whether it makes sense to keep a system where the power is passed down through families. Some people also question if it is fair to have people that aren't elected making important decisions.

Moe: It's a complex issue. But the coronation will unite people, allowing them to share in the festivities and feel a sense of national pride.

Frank: That's true. These events make communities feel closer and create a shared identity. They also give us a chance to think about our past while looking towards the future.
